

Giving Students Feedback

Friday, July 15, 2005 with Jerry B. Vannatta, M.D. College of Medicine

Description: This session will introduce the use of feedback as a tool for orienting learners, setting learning goals, and providing both observation and evaluation of learning process and outcomes. The overall goal of the session is to provide a practical approach for offering learners a performance assessment in clinical or other hands-on learning experiences where faculty can observe knowledge, technical skills and values/behavior (e.g., cognitive, psychomotor and affective learning).

Learning Objectives

- Discuss the structure of feedback
- Describe link between goal setting and feedback
- List the important steps in the feedback process
